PREFACE TO THE ENGLISH EDITION.

WHILE my octavo Latin-English Dictionary has met the ordinary want of Colleges and Schools, there has still been a call for a more copious work of the same kind as a book of reference in libraries, and for the convenience of advanced students who do not shrink from the purchase of a large and costly volume. At the same time, it has appeared desirable to transfer to our language the substance of two critical and elaborate Latin-German Dictionaries by Dr. William Freund, in which Latin Lexicography has been carried to a high degree of perfection. These considerations have led me to undertake the task of publishing the Lexicon which is now presented to the reader.

The Dictionaries of Dr. Freund are: 1. WÖRTERBUCH der Lateinischen Sprache, nach historisch-genetischen Principien, mit steter Berücksichtigung der Grammatik, Synonymik, und Alterthumskunde, 4 Bände, 8vo; and, 2. GESAMMTWÖRTERBUCH der Lateinischen Sprache; enthaltend sowohl sämtliche Wörter der alt-Lateinischen Sprache bis zum Untergange des weströmischen Reiches, mit Einschluss der Eigennamen, als auch die wichtigsten mittel- und neu-Lateinischen Wörter, namentlich die in die neueren Europäischen Sprachen übergegangenen, so wie die Lateinischen und Latinisirten Kunstausdrücke der Medizin, Chirurgie, Anatomie, Chemie, Zoologie, Botanik, u.s.w.; mit durchgängiger Unterscheidung der klassischen von der unklassischen Ausdrucksweise, und mit vorzüglicher Berücksichtigung der Ciceronianischen Phraseologie, 2 Bände, 8vo. I had no difficulty in making choice of the Gesamtwörterbuch (Condensed Dictionary) as the foundation of my labors, in decided preference to the more voluminous Wörterbuch. By an admirable system of compression, without material abridgment, the substance of the larger work is given or represented in the smaller; while the latter not only contains the results of more mature consideration, but is also enriched with additional matter, and recommended by other advantageous features peculiar to itself. In particular, this work has had the benefit of an extensive revision by the author, which has led to the remodelling of many important articles; it also contains a whole class of medical and other scientific terms not to be found in the former, and includes a comparison of the Italian and French languages with the Latin of various ages. The excellence of these Dictionaries, especially of the Gesamtwörterbuch, consists in—careful philological criticism, embracing an accurate discrimination of the age and quality of words and meanings (Classical prose, Poetical, Ante- and Post-classical, &c.)—an admirable arrangement of phrases—a very minute and thorough application of a system already adopted by earlier Lexicographers for the classification of meanings (which, it may be observed, are here divided and subdivided, not only into Proper and Figurative (metaphorical), but into Proper and Metonymical, or Proper, Metonymical, and Figurative, and also into General and Special)—and the addition of many new words and phrases from the most recent researches of philologists.

In preparing this volume, I have found occasion for more labor than I at first expected. This labor has consisted partly in the editorial task of supplying manifest omissions, and correcting many thousand misprints which are scattered over the whole surface of the Gesamtwörterbuch, and partly in carrying out the plan and extending the substance of the work itself, sometimes from Freund's larger Dictionary, and sometimes from independent sources. In the department of medical and other scientific terminology I have thought it right to explain the Latin words, rather than to give merely verbal renderings; for which purpose I have availed myself of information contained in several of our standard works, more especially HOOPER's Medical Dictionary, and the Pentaglott Dictionary of DR. SHIRLEY PALMER. In Botany I have derived assistance from LOUDON's Encyclopædia of Plants.

In some of the earlier stages of the work I have been assisted by Dr. Werner, of Cheltenham, and W. Frädersdorff, Esq., of the Taylor Institute, Oxford.

J. E. RIDDLE.

PREFACE OF THE AMERICAN EDITOR.

THE work herewith presented to the public is mainly an abridgment of Mr. Riddle's translation of Dr. Freund's "Gesamtwörterbuch der Lateinischen Sprache," and is designed to supply a deficiency that has long existed in our educational books for younger students of the Latin language. The editor has been repeatedly requested to prepare a work which, not much exceeding in size the various abridgments of Ainsworth, should contain, briefly stated, the results of the valuable contributions to Latin philology by distinguished European scholars within the last few years. In undertaking this task, the editor selected as the basis of his work, after comparison with other similar Lexicons, believing it to be, upon the whole, the best that had yet appeared, Dr. Freund's smaller Lexicon, a work marked throughout by accurate scholarship, philosophical analysis, and sound principles of criticism. Since this work, however, included authors never read in our schools or colleges, and was too copious in quotations of illustrative passages from classic writers, it was necessary to abridge it, in order to adapt it to school use. The editor conceives that a good school dictionary should contain: 1. All the words that occur in the authors read in schools and academies, with full definitions and explanations, each class of significations being supported by at least one brief and apposite quotation from some classic author. 2. The etymologies of the words introduced, with occasional comparisons with kindred roots in cognate languages, when such analogies are striking; all fanciful derivations and far-fetched analogies to be excluded; and, 3. The proper names that occur in the same authors, with their derivative adjectives, &c., accompanied by brief explanations.

In carrying out this design the editor has been careful to throw out no word which occurs in any author of good repute, which a student will ever read in his academic or in the greater part of his collegiate career. Nor has the editor confined himself to the work of abridgment ; while the historical and other divisions of the articles, with the selections of the examples, are from Freund, he has, where it was thought the matter might be improved, made additions from other sources, and sometimes has remodelled a whole article. In this part of the work the main authorities have been Bailey's Facciolati, Gesner's Latin Thesaurus, Riddle's translation of Scheller (folio), Georges's Lateinisch-Deutsches Wörterbuch, Klotz's Lateinisch-Deutsches Wörterbuch (as far as published), Mühlmann, and Kärcher. In the etymological portion more has been done, as Freund gives scanty information on this point, and introduces no analogies from kindred languages ; the derivations and analogies have been drawn from the most recent and reliable works in this department, such as Pott, Benfey, Schwenck, Bopp, Eichhoff, Donaldson, Chauvée, etc., etc. ; among others, use has been made of Kaltschmidt's School Dictionary, published in Chambers's classical series ; but cautiously, as Kaltschmidt very frequently introduces doubtful etymons and fanciful analogies to support his theory of the language, or assigns significations not justified by classic usage, to correspond with the assumed derivations, while, for an elementary work, too large a space is assigned to these in comparison with the extent of the work.

The second part is mainly a reprint of the English-Latin Dictionary of Kaltschmidt, with some few omissions of unnecessary or obsolete words, and some few alterations and corrections. The student who desires to pursue Latin composition to any extent will, of course, procure the valuable Lexicon of Riddle and Arnold, republished by Harper and Brothers, under the supervision of the editor of the present work.

The entire work is the result of the joint labors of the editor and his friend and colleague, Professor Drisler. The correction of the proofs has been greatly facilitated by the valuable aid of W. H. Wilson, Esq., one of the classical instructors in the Grammar School of the College, on whose care and accuracy the fullest reliance may be placed.
